In our time everyone spends their free time on the Internet, but is it actually a good thing?

Nowadays, having a smartphone with access to Internet is really common, even for kids. Surely, there are benefits, such as being able to connect with distant relatives, or finding information easily. But young kids are not usually restricted when browsing the web. They might become addicted to "TikTok" or pick up bad habits from influencers on social media platforms. Teenagers, on the other hand, could benefit from their time spent on the Internet. They have the ability to self-improve and find new hobbies, as well as friends, and are less subject to negative influences.

In conclusion, people nowadays have more freedom in expressing themselves online, some could say negative things, which is why kids should have restricted access, but overall it may be a very positive thing.
